I have a small construction business and I am back logged for the year with handyman type work and my current helper just isn't cutting it. FIRST and foremost, you must not be lazy or immune to hard work. This doesn't have to be a dead end temporary gig, but I need to see something from you. SECONDLY, some knowledge of construction, math, and how things work would be very useful. construction is a lot of common sense actually so if you learn quickly it's not a must that you have a lot of experience. LAST but not least, if this works out I will show you another part time gig on the sales side that can be lucrative. If you don't have a vehicle, this could be tough for you. I am located in Carrollton and do work from Ft. Worth to Allen to Mesquite to Denton. Right now working in Plano and Little Elm. Helper position starts at 10 per hour unless you have experience and then we can talk. Due to volume of calls I recieved last time I posted this, I prefer that you email me first. A resume is fine, or if you just want to leave your number then that's fine too. I will get back to you today and hopefully have someone starting tomorrow or Saturday.
