California-based production company is looking to cast b-film makers for documentary about the process of planning and shooting a micro-budget film. While indie dramas are great, we are concentrating on the classic b-movie genres of action, comedy, horror, and sci-fi. We would film "slice of life" and may show your day job, family, and friends as you go about working on a film shoot. We are looking for participants who love film making and have some kind of track record of other finished films/shorts who are willing to also film an audition video.

I do have to stress that the content of your films shouldn't be overtly offensive to the masses; "Demon Concubine Blonde Babes" may have an audience but it's not for us.

Filming dates TBD and participation during filming is compensated.

Please include a few paragraphs about yourself as well as links to your website/previous films and the title of what you would consider your next film to be. Due to on-going discussions with funding and distribution, please be willing to sign a simple non-disclosure agreement after your initial email.
