I am an experienced tutor and Electrical Engineering graduate of Clemson University. I have years of experience tutoring Math up to Calculus1. I am skilled at discerning where the students are in their present math knowledge, and then locating areas of improvement that I then push them towards attaining. I also have experience with preparing students to take the SAT by helping them improve their potential math, reading, and writing scores. I help them improve these scores by teaching them proper test taking skills and time saving techniques. I am skilled at teaching high-school students how to become college-ready individuals, who are fully capable of learning about, and succeeding in, the technology career of their choice. My method for giving students this college-readiness is to instill values in them by teaching them how competitive college can be, and to teach them how to train themselves to be top notch students once they leave home to begin their higher education at the school of their choice. Lessons on study skills, people skills to get to know professors in a professional manner, and time management are a few of the extra things that I can help them with. I only charge $15/hr for at least 2 hours I will have to charge gas money for up to 20 minutes of driving at a fee of $5. Close to 40 minutes will be $10 for gas. This gas money is only because tutoring is not like a 9-5 job where you go there and get in 8 hours. I am already charging a very low rate considering my skill and experience. I mainly put this ad out to help people who cannot afford a tutoring service. Just respond to my ad and we can talk about any problems you may have. I look forward to hearing from you, and I thank you for your time in advance!
