I have a beautiful 1 year old bearded dragon that I'm looking to rehome. He is friendly and has never tried to bite, that being said he does not like to be handled much. He is a great dragon but I feel he is better off in another home were he'll get more attention. He's currently eating dubias, crickets, superworms, and greens. He suffered a fall not to long ago when he was out of his cage and hurt his hand , he's still healing . I was told it may take a while but will heal on its own and the best thing to do is not handle him much right now and make sure he has nothing in his tank that he can climb on and jump off of . He does limp a bit due to the injury. I would perfer if he went to someone with reptile experience . If possible I would like to see what type of setup you have. His tank is not.
