QR Code Link to This Post Hi, im Tim and im going to be 25 this year. So I feel like if I want to have a skill in something and be great at it I need to start sooner than later. I have wasted too many years contemplating on what I want to do and the whole time i feel like its been sitting in front of me, but in the beginning I was too scared to go foward with it. Just recently I picked up a couple e book and two paper back books on C#, but one of them is pretty brief and advanced. I have also been looking at a couple youtube videos, but i feel like i need a mentor to help me learn how to think and come up with my own ideas (learning programming logic). I want to be able to start developing my own games in Unity. So far I've gone from just knowing basic data types like int, string etc. to parent classes and child classes (inheritance) and implementing properties, methods, and constructors. I know its going to take patients but I'm hoping that I can see it through. If I have to pay for a teach thats fine, but if you are willing to offer your time to me thats even better. I just wished that I had peers who already knew or wanted to know how to program so we could share content. I hope that there is someone out there who sees this and is willing to help me.
