 About me: I raised my own son (now 26 and on his own) single handed and practically raised a few nephews and nieces who are all now flourishing as adults

I have operated a home day care, worked at a private day care, been a teacher's aide, taught CCD elementary to high school. I have also directed child care at a homeless shelter, tended to children for parents with court ordered classes, and led after school programs-- in both enrichment/at-school settings and institutional for tough kids who need a place to be. Not to mention CYO, junior youth group, and my many years of Cub Scout and Boy Scout leadership. College credits in early childhood education.

A mature sitter is more reliable, accustomed to administering medications, can drive after midnight, is more easily accepted by 'tweens who balk at being "babysat" especially by a teen not much older than they-- I can even pick them up or drop off at events or I could take teens out for an activity you're not keen on joining them in (from movies/shopping to zip lining to tubing)
